Carmen Geha is an Assistant Professor of Public Administration at the American University of Beirut. She teaches public management, citizenship and civic engagement. She specializes in the study of how political systems and power-sharing politics affect public institutions in the Middle East and North Africa. She examines this effect within three areas: how public institutions interact with civil society, how public institutions challenge the participation of women, and how public institutions perform in times of crisis.

She is currently researching the Lebanese governmental political and policy actions towards the Syrian refugee crisis. Carmen is author of “Civil Society and Political Reform in Lebanon and Libya” (Routledge, 2016). She has published articles in the Journal of North African Studies and the British Journal for Middle Eastern Studies.

Carmen has held Visiting Scholar positions the Weatherhead Center in Harvard University as well as the Watson Institute at Brown University. She has a PhD in International Relations from the University of St. Andrews.