Simón Uribe is Assistant Professor in the Faculty of Political Science, Government and International Relations at the University of El Rosario in Bogotá. His research interests revolve around the intersection of infrastructure, the state, and the history of frontiers. He is also interested in documentary film-making and is currently working on an ethnographic film around transport infrastructure, a project supported by the Wenner-Gren Foundation’s Fejos Fellowship and Colombia’s Film Development Fund. His latest book, Frontier Road: Power, history, and the everyday state in the Colombian Amazon (Wiley-Blackwell 2017) critically examines the process of state-building in the Colombian region of Putumayo through the history and ethnography of a road. His current research focuses on the relationship between political order and guerrilla infrastructures in the context of Colombia’s armed conflict.
